ABOUT GST

The Goods and Service Tax (GST) is an indirect tax which is based on destination principle. Under this principle, tax is levied on goods and services in the place where they are consumed rather than where they are produced. It is also known as consumption tax.

Presently, there are various central and state taxes which are levied. Under GST, 17 of these taxes will be subsumed, thereby, removing the hassle of multiplicity of taxes and the cascading effect of taxation. This would in turn promote the concept of a common market for all.

GST would enable taxpayers to register themselves using their permanent account numbers and file tax returns, process payments and receive refunds online.

For this purpose, the government created a non-profit organisation called GST Network (GSTN) to provide the technological infrastructure needed by the central and state governments; taxpayers and other stakeholders for the execution and implementation of GST.

ABOUT TDS

What is TDS?

Tax Deducted at Source or TDS is a type of tax that is deducted from an individual's income on a periodical or occasional basis. TDS can be applicable for income that are regular as well as irregular in nature. Income Tax Act, 1961 regulates TDS in India through Central Board of Direct taxes (CBDT) under the Indian Revenue Services (IRS). TDS rule directs the payee or employer to deduct a certain amount of tax before making full payment to the receiver. TDS is applicable for salary, commission, professional fees, interest, rent, etc.

Advantages of TDS:

TDS is based on the principle of 'pay as and when you earn'. TDS is a win-win scenario for both the taxpayers and the government. Tax is deducted when making payments through cash, credit or cheque, which is then deposited with the central agencies.

- Responsibility sharing for deductor and tax collection agencies.
- Prevents tax evasion.
- Widens the tax collection base.
- Steady source of revenue for the government.
- Easier for a deductor as tax gets automatically collected and deposited to the credit of the central government.
